THE INTELLIGENCER.

WHEELING, JUNE 10, 1898.

Flag of the free heart's hope and home!
By angel hands to valor given;
Thy stars have lit the welkin dome,
Glimer all thy hues were born in Heaven.
Forever float that standard sheet!
Where breathes the foe but falls before us;
With Freedom's soil beneath our feet,
And Freedom's banner streaming o'er us?

—Joseph Rodman Drake.

By order of the committee,
ELLIOTT, Chairman.
W. J. W. COWDEN, Secretary.

An Encouraging Outlook.

The war situation in the West Indies is rapidly assuming the critical stage wherein the operations in the future will not consist wholly of the movements of the naval vessels. The transportation of troops is now under way, and while there is no official announcement of the fact it seems to be accepted that the transports with 27,000 troops are enroute to effect a landing near Santiago. In all probability the marines sent in advance to prepare the way, with the assistance of the naval squadron, for the invading army have already been landed.

With the active operations by the army inaugurated we may look soon for important developments, beginning probably with the fall of Santiago. Sampson's fleet seems to have pretty thoroughly cleared the way for the movement on Cuba by the land forces, and there is every confidence that the success of the campaign which has been undertaken is assured. Necessarily there is a lack of official information to the public on all these points, and some of the reports may be premature, but there is no doubt that the delay in the plan to unite the federal and insurgent forces in eastern Cuba, and to send an army of occupation to Puerto Rico, is practically ended.

There are disquieting reports regarding Spanish warships off Havana, but they are causing little concern among the naval authorities. The vessels now operating along the southern coast of Cuba, it is asserted, will not be needed to meet such Spanish vessels as are in the neighborhood of Havana, as other warships off the Florida coast are competent for the task.

The news that the Spaniards at Manila have surrendered to Dewey to save themselves from the insurgents, published yesterday, seems to be warranted by the situation as last officially reported by the American commander. In the meantime it will be but a short time until the first relief expedition sent to Manila by this government arrives, and the strain so far as the American naval force is concerned will be materially relieved.

the American fleet. While the report admits the sinking of the Spanish cruiser Reina Mercedes, and the loss of a part of her crew, it states with unblushing falsity that the American fleet was repulsed with "the loss of 1,500 men."

It is by filling the ears of the Spanish populace with these accounts of imaginary victories, and by turning defeat into triumph on paper, that the Spanish government and the press, which is controlled by the government, are laying the disturbed state of the public mind, and the disquiet which wants but a match to ignite the flames of revolution. But it is but a temporary postponement of the crisis. The populace in Spain, ignorant as it is, cannot long be deprived of the truth. Sooner or later the truth must dawn upon it, and then will come the reckoning.

The facts that the Philippines are lost, and that Puerto Rico and Cuba are at the mercy of the United States; that reported victories have been in reality reverses; that fleets supposed to be enroute to American waters and the Philippines are still tied up in a decrepit condition, and utterly useless for want of funds for their equipment; that the people have been systematically made the victims of deceit from the very beginning of the war concerning every condition and situation—all this knowledge, when it becomes public property in Spain, will accomplish more in the direction of the undoing of Spain than anything else that could happen at home to bring about such a result.

What an attitude Spain occupies before the world to-day. A government, bombastic, boasting of its "honor" and its courage, taking advantage of the ignorance of its own people in its effort to avert the inevitable domestic result of a losing war with a foreign power—a war which will strip it of its colonial power and its revenues, and wipe out the last vestige of its once important influence on the world's destiny. It is the complete degeneracy which has come with centuries of ignorance, corruption and non-progressiveness. It is the consequence of thirteenth century civilization yet practiced in Spain, and at the golden dawn of twentieth century civilization in all the remainder of the world.

Oregon's Significant Election.

At this time, when the attention of the country is centred on the news from the scenes of war, Oregon furnishes a pleasing diversion for a majority of the American people by firing the first political gun of the year. She has done this by rolling up a handsome Republican majority in the state election. Oregon did not accomplish this feat on local issues, but upon issues for the gold standard, but upon issues of national importance. The Republican platform declared for a gold standard. The endorsement was unqualified and there was no room for doubt concerning its language. There was a recognition frankly that the United States is on a gold basis and a declaration for maintaining that position.

This open course by the Republicans of Oregon resulted in two things. It drew the lines between two parties, the Republican party and that comprised of all the silver elements; it also secured an overwhelming Republican victory in the state, including the election of a Republican governor, a Republican congressional delegation and a practical solid Republican legislature. It was a blow to the free silver party, for the campaign was purely upon that issue, and the silver men forced the fighting. The result means that Oregon has served notice that it is perfectly satisfied with the action of the country in resolving to maintain the safe monetary basis in the election of 1896. The action of the party in Oregon in adopting a platform that left no doubt of the meaning of its language was approved by the people of the state, and other states will follow on the same line, wherever this issue is forced by those who still cling to the exploded depreciated dollar idea. Oregon has done herself honor.

The significance of the election is national, and those who watched the course of the campaign in Oregon see in it a lesson that is at least worthy of the consideration of thoughtful people. The New York Post, while it is not a supporter of the Republican party, and is daily criticising the tariff and some other policies of the Republican Congress and administration, comments on the election in the far western state, in part as follows:

The instruction of the Oregon election to Congress is that the Republicans should make no compromise with the Democratic-Populist-Silver combine in reference to "coining the seigniorage," or issuing more greenbacks, or doing any other act which looks to a depreciated currency. The people are prepared for this issue not merely in Oregon, but everywhere else. Undoubtedly, the silver-mining states will adhere to silver. Perhaps the south will adhere to it by way of punishing the Republicans for appointing negro postmasters or for other reasons akin to that, but it is plain that the northern states generally are not to be swayed from the gold standard, and especially that they will tolerate no watering of the currency while the present war is in progress. All the indications point to a Republican victory in the west next fall, including the trans-Missouri states. The prosperity flowing from good crops and remunerative prices for wheat has opened people's eyes in Kansas, Nebraska, and the Dakotas as well as in Oregon.

Coming at this time when the importance of maintaining the national credit is more generally recognized than it has been at any time since the agitation of the silver question began, the Oregon election and the circumstances under which it was held is of more than ordinary significance, as directing the attention of the public to the points above referred to.

An Absurd Charge.

For downright mendacity, which is little short of that displayed by Spanish authorities and Spanish sympathizers, the charge that is being made by yellow newspapers in this country that the President is prolonging the war for political effect this fall has had no equal in all the history of partisan politics in this country. Were not these indulgences dangerous in their tendency and under some circumstances might be justly regarded as treasonable for the harm they do, they would be absurd. Their very lack of logic disproves them.

If, for instance, there were any political advantage to be gained in the war, as these libellers of the President would have the public believe, would it not be a greater advantage to bring the war to a successful close speedily than to prolong it? Would not that be the popular thing to do? When the malicious, treacherous journals, for a mean partisan purpose, seek to prejudice the public mind against the head of the government in a war which calls for the support of the great heart and mind and strength of the people, they should at least base their criticisms on a charge which has the logic of common sense in it.

The gravity with which it is announced that two spies have arrived from Puerto Rico with valuable information for Uncle Sam, may induce some credulous people to believe that immediately upon the arrival of the spies in New York they called on the newspaper reporters and thoroughly posted them regarding their mission before reporting to Uncle Sam. True, that is not the usual plan adopted by spies, but what right have we to doubt the solemn statement of newspapers that have patriotically assumed the management of the war operations for the government?

The war editor of the Register is still "pointing out" to the government how much better he could have managed the creation of an army, and equip it for service in a tropical country, if about one-half the time that anyone else could have done it. It quotes newspaper fakes in support of assertions long since proven untrue by events. But that doesn't matter. The eternal truth remains that there are more military and naval experts in the yellow journal editorial rooms than in all the armies and navies.

There is little doubt that the transports conveying troops for the invasion are well on their way to the selected landing places. The reports are so persistent and come from so many different sources that there is scarcely any room for doubt. The destination of the troops that are understood to have left Tampa is, of course, unknown. That they sailed has come to be a fixed fact in the minds of the public. Early next week there may be significant news from the West Indies.

A splendid vantage point was gained by the reduction of the fortifications at Calmanero by a portion of the American fleet, and the capture of this safe and particularly fine harbor seems to have been one of Sampson's designs from the beginning, judging from all reports.

War With.

"The Spaniards needed one more ship at Manila." Yes; marksmanship.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"I'm sorry, sir," said the nurse to the anxiously waiting young father, "but you won't be able to call it Dewey. You'll have to call it Deborah, sir."—Chicago Tribune.

Hoax—I don't care what you say, fleshly's bound to be a brave soldier. Joak—What! That fat lumpus? Hoax—That's just it. He's too fat to run.—Philadelphia Record.

"There's been another engagement," said young Mr. Dolley, who had been reading the latest war news, "Oh, dear," sighed Miss Frocks, "I wish I did." "In an engagement." And in a few minutes she was in one.—Harper's Bazar.

"Do you know why they are called 'elpher dispatches'?" Of course, I can't be sure, but I have an idea that the elpher represents the amount of news the public usually gets out of them."—Chicago Post.

"They tell me that the Spaniards have never perfected a disappearing gun," said the man of an investigating gun of mind. "Their guns disappeared in Manila Bay all right," replied his more flippant companion.—Detroit Free Press.

President McKinley Reviewing the Troops at Camp Alger.

On the twenty-eighth of last month the President of the United States, for the first time in thirty years, inspected the condition and witnessed the manoeuvres of an army prepared to take the field against the enemies of the nation. This notable review took place at Camp Alger, twelve miles from Washington, where 14,000 men of the National Guard of eight states have been sworn to go into the federal service and are encamped, awaiting orders to go to the front.

President McKinley is an old soldier, and his long and active experience in the civil war has taught him the strength and weakness of volunteer armies. The parade, therefore, was no mere formal matter—it meant business. No detail in the appearance of the men and their equipment escaped the trained and watchful eye of the President, and he was constantly pointing out to Secretary Alger, who stood beside him, the visible evidences of the lack of preparation for active campaigning. It must be acknowledged that such defects were extremely noticeable, but the President was assured that the equipment would be thoroughly completed before another week was over.

From a spectacular point of view the parade was completely satisfactory, and the march past, as illustrated by a picture in Harper's Weekly, was stirring and impressive. The enthusiasm and physical condition of the soldiers evoked much admiration from the President's party, and all the military authorities agreed that the hardy looking men with proper accoutrements would make as fine a body of troops as could be wished for.

After the review, President McKinley made a long tour of inspection around the camp, in order to satisfy himself and careful observation. Every regiment greeted him with hearty cheers and officers and privates were unanimous in their satisfaction over his visit. Indeed the entire nation is to be congratulated that its present executive is so desirous and fitted to take an active and effective part in preparing the forces of the country for war.

The Chinese Flag.

The standard of the Celestial Empire is a very queer looking affair. It represents the most grotesque of green dragons on a yellow ground. The latter is suggestive not only of the national complexion, but also of that of a sufferer from biliousness. To remove this unbecoming tint from the complexion, use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which will speedily regulate your liver, prevent malaria, and remedy dyspepsia, nervousness, rheumatism and kidney complaint.

NEWEST OF PARLOR GAMES.

A Nice Method of Becoming Acquainted With the Names of Our Warships.

Washington Post: A Capital Hill girl gave a birthday party one night last week, and the game of the evening wasn't progressive euchre nor yet whist, nor high-five, which they play so much out in Omaha, nor pillow-dox, which they play at the British embassy, nor anything else of the kind. It was something new. It was amusing, and, indispensable consideration of all "parlor" games, it gave everybody a chance to win something.

Each of the players received a card bearing the name of a dozen or so vessels belonging to our navy. With the card went a pencil and a pad of paper, on which he was required to write the meaning of each name. If the name happened to be that of a city, he was required to tell where the city is. If the name was that of a man, he was to tell who the man was. Of course, some of the names were easy enough, but when it came to telling whether Miantonomoh and Monahan are mountains or capes or rivers or whatever they are, it wasn't everybody who knew.

There was a head prize for the greatest number of correct answers—it was a pair of navy button sleeve-links, by the way—and there was a foot prize. The girl who won the foot prize wrote that Amphitrite is the name of the Greek goddess of love, but afterward she scratched it out and said she didn't know.
